

Trades Congress President Does Not Believe in Radical Measures

Those who preach class war instead of co-operation are not real friends of the labor movement in this country. True, labor has amongst its members some who do not believe in this philosophy, but they are not in a majority, he said.

Then did Tom Moore, president of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, speak to a joint luncheon given by the board of trade and the several service clubs at the Macdonald hotel here.

He then spoke of the industrial life of Canada, was freshly acquainted with the speaker.

The entire movement is founded upon an idea of construction and not destruction as an enemy would make out. Mr. Moore declared.

There is no fault or need in co-operation with labor, because we realize that there are no problems which it is generally accepted as a duty of all to solve.

There are groups in the labor movement who continue to preach class war instead of co-operation, persons who believe that there are no problems which it is generally accepted as a duty of all to solve.

1928 Congress is Likely to Convene in Ontario Capital

That Toronto will be the scene of the next Trades and Labor Congress was the impression carried by a steady stream of delegates, though workers in the interests of co-operation, making a note of the sentiment to have the convention held there next year.

ALTERATION IN CONSTITUTION IS PROPOSED

Congress Considers Motion For Vice Presidents from Each Province

A resolution calling for the alteration of the constitution of the Trades and Labor Congress increasing the number of the executive from a president, secretary-treasurer and three vice-presidents, to that of a president, secretary-treasurer and a vice-president from each of the provinces having affiliations with the congress, was under discussion for the major portion of Thursday morning's session at the Memorial Hall.

At this the arguments became rather heated and the government was moved with several other speakers to offer their views on this question.

Resolution Opposed

P. S. A. Hays, vice-president of the Trades and Labor Congress, opposed the resolution on the ground that it would create a "class" executive and suggested as an alternative that the executive committee be composed of the provincial bodies as suggested, which would be in accordance with the executive at the annual proceedings of Labor's demands for legislation.

At this the arguments became rather heated and the government was moved with several other speakers to offer their views on this question.

Milkmen Must Work Silently In Windy City

CHICAGO, Aug. 25.—Rattling milk wagons that disturb the early morning slumber of Chicagoans would be silenced under a resolution passed before the city council yesterday.

The resolution provides that all such vehicles must be rubber-tired. One councilman, a member of the committee, in which the resolution was referred, suggested that milk be delivered in front water bottles to prevent noise when they are placed on front doorsteps.

CONGRESS IS ADVISED TO BE MODERATE

Minister Praises the Liberal Government's Action re Old Age Pensions

"The record of the Liberal Government in enacting legislation favorable to the working classes should commend itself to every delegate here," declared Hon. Peter Heenan in his address to the delegates to the Trades and Labor Congress, "but I should also like to give some of the honors to the untiring efforts of the members of the executive council of this body as well. They have come before the government with schemes for the betterment of the welfare of the people, which have at all times received the most sympathetic consideration from the government which I have the honor to represent."

4 Japan Vessels Could

In Both Fatal Cases Destroyers Were Struck by Cruisers

TOKYO, Aug. 25.—Four Japanese warships cruising through the darkness with lights extinguished last night, which may have cost 129 lives, according to dispatches from the Matsuura naval station.

In both cases, destroyers were struck by cruisers which were patrolling night duty against the invaders. The cruiser Hata struck the destroyer Wakaba, which sank in 14 minutes, with the loss of 102 men.

CHAPTER XXXI

"I shall win these silver slippers," Vee-Vee murmured as she strolled alone on her high-heeled shoes over the stubble field from which a crop had evidently been recently cut.

"Backen you want and ven for a few days," the more ardent man of the two assured her optimistically. "Ain't much further. There's our bird right over there. Its point is where a giant pair of wings hugged the ground. "Clase you might have give you a pair of sensible shoes out of that lot of yours that my better is looking for you."

"My hat," Vee-Vee echoed in intense surprise. "You mean that you have some of my clothes in that bag, lady," the moon-faced man chuckled.

"How did you get my things? Did you break into my room?" "Oh, that was easy," the moon-faced man assured her. "Just had to give the houseman on your floor at the hotel a fat tip to turn the trick for us. None he picked out the things you like best, but we can't guarantee that."

"Don't talk so much," the other man snapped. "Here's a beautiful pair of shoes. May be a bit big. It's an oversight of mine. But it will keep you warm. You can fit your head up in a corner of that shawl-like of yours. House this flying filver don't cut up no snarky tonight," he added apprehensively to his partner in crime.

"Where it ain't a real up-to-date air huggy, miss," the moon-faced man chuckled. "But there plenty of room for three. If you don't mind a bit of squeezing. And there's enough to keep up in the air the rest of the night. If you miss and I see strap you in," he added, after Vee-Vee had slipped her arms into the enormous, long, mottled-colored garment and had absently wound a corner of her shawl tightly about her head.

"Must say you're a good sport, miss. Most faggots would be selling their heads off to try to give me even one!"

Vee-Vee laughed a little thrill of excitement quivering her nerves as she allowed herself to be helped into the rear seat of the airplane. The moon-faced man took his place inside her, and hunched the head-leather strap that was to hold her securely.

The girl shivered and clenched her hands in the big pockets of the overcoat as the motorized bird hopped bumpily across the field, then began to rise almost imperceptibly on long blades.

"Oh," Vee-Vee gasped, her hands flung out of the pockets of her coat and clasping her stomach instinctively for the ground seemed to be clenching at her, as though to keep her.

After a long time, during which she had borne entirely untroubled now, over the edge of her anxiety, to the pretense of the leather strap that stifled her, and she was waiting with supreme satisfaction and with a thought that had been trying for many minutes to get her attention forced it way through her childish pleasure in flying. Miss Macklin had said he would come to her as assistance in an airplane, if necessary.

Why hadn't he realized before that up all probability Jerry had told him for her, had in some unaccountable way in aid had decided this business was to be his? At her feet, Jerry waited for her, his incredibly blue eyes blinking with triumph and wicked delight in his own cunning.

FLAPPER FANNY SAYS

It was like Jerry to plan a spectacular feat like this. He was such a boy, for all his cleverness.

"He probably hasn't given a thought to the hullabaloo that will be raised at the hotel when the abduction is discovered," she smiled to herself.

But she would not worry about that now, could not picture the end of the adventure. "Jerry," she murmured, and the wind seemed to laugh at her as it thrust the words down her throat, straight to her heart.

After a long time, she had not seen him. It really was a long time, growing down with the rush of wind in her face and the thrub of the airship, fogging her body as something by and by a mother's hug. She was almost asleep when the moon-faced man nudged her elbow and pointed downward.

Vee-Vee nodded and smiled then looked down, but, as the winged craft descended, far below the hovering city what its name might be, but it did not seem to matter much. She had heard one watching drowsily, she could make out a narrow ribbon of water, with tiny lights studing it at frequent intervals, like diamonds in a necklace.

She realized, after a moment's bewilderment, that she was gazing upon the lovely Hudson, reduced almost to nothingness by the magic of a changed viewpoint. The pilot seemed to be steering his course by the river, and she, too, concluded sleepily that the plane was heading her to New York - and Jerry.

Usually the airship dipped sharply, descending several hundred feet in a few seconds, and then, as time it did so her stomach felt as if it were being pulled from her body by the clothing bands of a thousand malicious devils. Sometimes there came a sensation of humming, as if the ship had struck its nose against invisible obstacles.

She did not know she had been asleep until the moon-faced man had jugged her elbow again. He was excited and shawing as if, too, had snatched a nap. She was little restless and having a dropping a short nap. She looked down at her feet, and the rounded edge of her seat and looked down from the plane. The air was rising up to meet them, raising her heartily that her heart was in her throat. Then an suddenly as the descent had begun, the plane was throbbing powerfully again, and she knew that it was going steadily forward, though there was a sensation of arrest. In a few seconds the pilot was leading the plane toward earth in a long, slanting sweep.

She knew that he was in control of the plane and was maneuvering for a landing.

The terrific noise of the engine stopped suddenly, and the absence of sound was so acute that it hurt her ears. She was aware that the plane had come to a halt, and she was aware that she was alone in the world.

"Well, here we are! Have a nice trip," the moon-faced man was grinning at her as he leaped over the side of the plane.

Vee-Vee laughed, and she was aware that she was alone in the world. She was aware that she was alone in the world.

"Jerry," she said, and she was aware that she was alone in the world. She was aware that she was alone in the world.

After a long time, she had not seen him. It really was a long time, growing down with the rush of wind in her face and the thrub of the airship, fogging her body as something by and by a mother's hug. She was almost asleep when the moon-faced man nudged her elbow and pointed downward.

Vee-Vee nodded and smiled then looked down, but, as the winged craft descended, far below the hovering city what its name might be, but it did not seem to matter much. She had heard one watching drowsily, she could make out a narrow ribbon of water, with tiny lights studing it at frequent intervals, like diamonds in a necklace.

First Round of Dragoons Cup Play Ends in Tie Game

CLOVER BAR—CALLIES CONTEST PRODUCTIVE OF CLASSY PLAY

Score is 2 to 2—Brace of Penalties Met Out by Referee Bill Thompson—Bobbie Davidson Net Twice On Gift Shots

The first game in the Dragoons Cup between Canadian Nationals and Clover Bar, ended in a two-two draw last night, mainly through the inflicting of two penalty shots awarded by Referee Bill Thompson. Bobby Davidson netting both shots.

The game was well contested, the Bar players putting up a splendid game against their more experienced opponents, and for the brilliant display of Pussell in goal, would have scored on more than one occasion.

The Nationals attack led the Bar half back, a merry race and Pussell, who had drifted to outside right position, came near to scoring at times. Both teams started with a man shot, the Bar filling up shortly after the game started, but the C.N. went the limit with ten men.

Starting towards the north and the Nationals took the play and extended Bryant and Hobbs, but Neshit got his hands to the ball and cleared. Shortly after, an attack on the left left Graham and Patterson in the play, clearing them well in hand and cleared many hands before the play reached the goal.

JOCK DAVIDSON IS OUTSTANDING

Excitement at Fever Heat in Sixth Race. When Confluent Throws Jockey—Canadian Bred Horses Capture First Two Events

Get-away-day at the annual fall race meet saw one of the largest crowds of all and the greatest excitement with the consequent display of enthusiasm by all hands.

The boys and girls who made the turnstile click joyously were well served up for a flock of thrills and the points failed them not. Furious yelling and bullying commenced with the first race and gathered in momentum with the sixth and final dash when decorum was unconfined and hellian let loose with all the forces of the race.

Proof that Canada can produce some of the finest racing horses was given when Canadian bred animals won the first two races.

The sixth big prize paid during the day was in the fifth race when the Canadian bred horse, "The Boy," won the race.
